Aug 6 Transfiguration of our Lord on Mount Tabor By St. Ephrem the Syrian

He brought them up to the mountain that he might also show them, before his resurrection, the glory of his divinity, so that when he had risen from the dead they might then know that he had not received this glory as the reward of his labor, and as one who had it not, but that he had had it from all eternity, together with the Father and the Holy Spirit. It was therefore this glory of his divinity, which was hidden and veiled to humanity, that he revealed to the apostles on the mountain. For they beheld his face shining as the sun, and his garments white as snow.

The disciples upon the mountain beheld two suns: one, to which they were accustomed, shining in the sky; and another, to which they were accustomed, one which shone down on them, and from the firmament gave light to the whole world, and which then shone for them alone, which was the face of Jesus before them. And his garments appeared to them white as light, for the glory of his divinity poured forth from his whole body, and all his members radiated light. His face shone, not as the face of Moses, from without; from his face the glory of his divinity poured forth, yet remained with him. From himself came his own light, and was contained within him. For it did not spread out from elsewhere, and fall on him; it did not come slantwise to adorn him. Neither did he receive it, to use for a while, nor did he reveal to them the unfathomable depths of his glory, but only as much as the pupils of their eyes could take in and distinguish.

And there appeared to them Moses and Elijah talking with him. They gave thanks to him that their own words had been fulfilled, and together with them the words of all the prophets. They adored him for the salvation he had wrought in the world for humankind, and because he had in truth fulfilled the mystery which they had themselves foretold. The prophets therefore were filled with joy, and the apostles likewise, in their ascent of the mountain. The prophets rejoiced because they had seen his humanity, which they had not known. And the apostles rejoiced because they had seen the glory of the divinity, which they had not known.
